A MELANCHOLY END.

A GIRL CLOSES A MISSILENT LIFE BY A PLUNGE IN THE RIVER.

Prompted by Chiding from Her Home Over the Sea, the Promise to Reform, But Only Sheds Deeper Into a Life of Shame—Body at the Morgue.

New York, Aug. 13.—Some boatmen while passing the southern end of Blackwell's Island, observed a piece of light red cloth floating near the rocks. It proved to be a woman's dress, and near it, floating on the waves, was the corpse of a woman. The nineteenth precinct police removed the body to the morgue. The remains were in an advanced state of decomposition.

Joseph Fogarty, keeper of the morgue, recognized the body as that of a young girl who leaped from the Grand street ferry boat. He made an examination of the clothing and discovered three letters bearing the postmark of Wurtzburg, Germany. They were in German, and directed to "Miss Gretchen Valentin, New York city post-office," and were signed, "Your Loving Mother, Amelia."

Shortly after 7 o'clock Mrs. Bertha Fisher, of No. 33 Forsyth street, called at the morgue and identified the dress and letters as belonging to a young girl who had lived in her house. A room was found upon inquiry that the girl was only nineteen years of age and had been in this country three years. She left Germany to seek employment here as a servant and had been working as a domestic until a year ago last New Year's day. At that time she called on Mrs. Fisher, who was living at No. 60 Christy street, accompanied by a well dressed man about thirty years of age, who engaged a room for the girl with Mrs. Fisher. He paid the rent and promised to be responsible for her bills. The man called frequently to see Gretchen and when she was ill he sent her a physician. Upon her recovery he took her away and Mrs. Fisher heard that Gretchen had been living at No. 121 Canal street.

A few weeks ago the girl came to Mrs. Fisher, who was then living at No. 33 Forsyth street, and engaged a room. She was out during the entire night and returning early in the forenoon slept during the day. One day Gretchen brought a letter to Mrs. Fisher from her mother, and asked her to read it. It was filled with rebukes for the wayward daughter's conduct, and ended with a mother's pleading words that she would resume her life as a domestic or come home. The letter inclosed a ticket to Wurtzburg, and a request that the girl should return at once.

Mrs. Fisher said that after reading the letter, she talked to the girl and told her that she would write her mother about the girl's conduct. Gretchen then promised to seek employment as a domestic. She spent the night, however, about the streets, and became addicted to opium smoking, and toward the last spent much of her time in the "joints" on Mont street.

Last week she received another letter from her mother, chiding her for her reckless life and saying that she (the mother) was coming to New York. This letter the girl took to Mrs. Fisher, and seemed in great fear of her mother's threatened visit. She seemed very penitent and again declared that she would lead a better life, but she again fell into evil ways and, after a night spent in an opium den, she walked to the Grand street ferry. She waited until nearly all the passengers had moved to the front of the ferryboat, and then, quickly stepping outside the chains, leaped overboard.

The body never rose to the surface, and the search for it was abandoned. The body, which is still at the morgue, is that of a girl of medium height, with a fair complexion and of the physique. Long tresses of blonde hair fell over the well-formed shoulders. In life and health she had not seemed to be very pretty. An inquest will be held by the coroner and the remains buried in potter's field.

GOVERNOR HOADLY TALKS.

He Defines His Attitude Politically and Gives His Opinion of Mr. Cleveland. CINCINNATI, Aug. 13.—Governor Hoadly, in an interview, explains that George B. Wright, whom he restored by his influence to a position in the pension office, from which he had been discharged, was no longer a Republican, but a Democrat. The governor says further:

"I am not a candidate for governor. I do not wish for the nomination. If there is anything I can do to avoid it I will do it. I announced in my speech on January 8 at Columbus that I should not seek a re-election nor again be a candidate for re-election for governor of Ohio, but that I would gladly promote the success of any of the gentlemen who had been named in that connection. I have not changed my attitude from that day to this. If either Thurman or Converse should be nominated I will make a generous contribution and labor in season and out of season for their success. I have no right to assume that the Democratic party will draft me to run in the face of the fact I have so often distinctly announced that I do not want the nomination. It will be time enough for me to define my duty under the circumstances when the occasion comes."

He said in regard to Cleveland: "I most heartily endorse that noble gentleman in the presidency as far as he has gone, and I am earnestly in favor of his re-election by the Ohio Democratic convention."

HE SANG AND DIED.

"If Nobody Else Will Sing, Then I Will Sing."

New York, Aug. 13.—While the Plymouth Rock was returning from Poughkeepsie a plain dressed, intelligent looking man walked into the cabin, where hundreds of passengers were seated in groups, and sitting down at the piano, said: "If nobody else will sing, then I will." He ran his hands over the keys skillfully, and then in a rich bass voice sang "Nancy Lee," till the cabin echoed with applause. He sang four other songs in response to success and was just beginning the fifth when his voice suddenly failed, and he fell back on the floor.

Passengers ran to his assistance, but there was no doctors among them and he died in a few moments. No one on board knew who he was and there was no papers in his pockets or marks on his clothing to tell.

When the boat reached her moorings in this city word was sent to the police and the body was removed to the morgue. There Coroner Messner made an autopsy and found that death was caused by heart disease.
